Cheese

Cheese is made when milk turns into a solid form* that you can eat. There are many types of cheese. Many things affect* the style, texture and flavor of a cheese. These include the milk (cow or goat), if the milk has been pasteurised, the amount of butterfat, bacteria and mould in the cheese, how the cheese is made and how old the cheese is.

People have been making cheese since before history was written down. We don't know when cheese was first made. It is known that cheese was eaten by the Sumerians in about 4000 BC.

Cheese is made using milk. The milk of cows, goats, and sheep are most popular. Buffalo, camel and even mare's milk can also be used. Cheese makers usually* heat the milk in large pots. They add* salt and a substance from the stomach of young cows called rennet. This curdles* the milk and makes it solid. The solid milk is called the cheese. Some makers do not add rennet. They curdle* the milk in other ways. Cheese made in factories is often made by curdling the milk using bacteria. Other ingredients are added and the cheese is usually aged for a short time.
